

Life's a Conversation.

Aphasia Institute

Established in Toronto, Canada in 1979, the Aphasia Institute has been an education and learning centre that has served as a community, provincial, national and international resource for anyone affected by, or working with, aphasia for almost 40 years.

In everything we do – from education and training to applied research and resource development – we work to break down communication barriers and inspire hope in people affected by, or working with, aphasia.

We know clients with aphasia are competent, intelligent individuals. We have developed a set of communication techniques called Supported Conversation for Adults with Aphasia (SCA™). These effective and efficient tools help healthcare professionals overcome the communication barriers aphasia creates and enable equal access to healthcare for their clients despite the communication challenges they face.
